exhibition of the new No. otary Neostyle at Cranston's popular book and stationery store, 158 Main street, last Saturday night was a succass. The large show window was tas-tilly arranged with Neostyles and sup-plles for same, show cards, circulars and many fine specimens of work done by this method. In the center of the window a new No. 8 machine was shown and was operated by one of the fair cierks in a skilful manner, fine specimens being rapidly turned out and specimens being rapidly turned out and distributed among the crowd of interested spectators. Several times during the evening the sidewalk became blocked and the police had difficulty in 'ceeping a passageway open. The demonstration will be repeated this evening, and all interested should attend. See advertisement on Page Five.

BROADWAY THEATER. Daniel Sully in a New Play.

When Daniel Sully appears at the roadway theater in Jerrold Shepard's new play. The Game, the event will be one of a special nature to him as well as to the audience. Mr. Sully has been so long identified with the character of a priest in his previous plays that his departure to a new and widely different role is a decided novely for the nt role is a decided novelty for the cent role is a decided novelty for the actor as well as an innovation of interest to his admirers. It is a far cry from the genial, kindly Father Daly of The Matchmaker to the hustling, aggressive, sporting politician Tim Maye in The Game. Thousands of theatergoers have long admired Mr. Sully's ability, but few can speak as to his bernatility, for the reason that he has been identified with one style of character for a number of seasons past. There are probably not two roles on the stage today so widely dissimilar, so utterly opposite in their demands upon the actor's art, as the old part Mr. Sully has abandoned and the new one he has assumed. Those who have seen the new play are positive in their statements that the change is greatly for the better, not only in the strength and interest of the character, but in the greater scope it gives to the star for the exercise of the new or their
